Red Deer Troops Ready

The following telegram was forwarded Monday evening to the Minister of Militia:

Red Deer, Alta.
August 10th, 1914.

Col. The Honorable Sam Hughes,
Minister of Militia and Defence,
Ottawa.

Honorable and Dear Sir,—

The Officer commanding "A" Squadron 35th Central Alberta Horse informs me the Squadron is recruited war strength. They are experienced horsemen, good shots, and desirous of active service of Dominion and Empire.

If mounted troops are required, either in Canada or abroad, the Red Deer Squadron will be ready to respond to the call of King and Country.

I am, dear Sir,
Yours faithfully,
E. MICHENER.

SERVICES ACCEPTED.

Major J. C. Moore, of the Central Alberta Horse, received a telegram yesterday morning direct from the Adjutant General at Ottawa, instructing him to enlist immediately all men prepared to go on active service. They must be put through a rigid medical, riding and shooting test. All men wishing to volunteer must report at the armory immediately.

Yesterday afternoon Major Moore and his staff were busy enrolling and testing troops.

A great amount of dissatisfaction is felt by members who enrolled in the Edmonton division for service at the front on finding that they are to be used for garrison duties in Canada.

FRENCH BEAT BACK GERMANS IN SHARP MOUNTAIN FIGHT

French Army In Control of Important Passes of Bonhomme

Paris, August 10.—An official communication says that the German troops are receiving reinforcements and that the French are also being strengthened.

A battle began on Saturday evening on the ridges of the Vosges mountains. Aeroplanes took part. The French troops after a desperate encounter, obtained possession of the mountain passes of Bonhomme and Sainte Marie. Then, on Sunday morning, when the fighting was resumed, they took a position dominating Sainte Marie Aux Mines.

The French losses, in the taking of Sainte Marie, are not specifically given in the official report, which confines itself to declaring that they were serious.

The wounded French and German soldiers were taken to the French fortress of Epinal, for treatment.

A French aeroplane which ascended during the engagement was repeatedly fired at, and the officer who was acting as observer of the German movement received a bullet in the hip. The pilot of the machine, however, brought him safely to the ground and he was able to return to Bedford, whither the aeroplane also was sent for repairs.

The German troops inundated the valley of the Seille, hoping by this means to stop the advance of the French, but the depth of water was not sufficient and the French troops were able to continue their march.

The French today were face with the outskirts of the forces of Hardt in front of Neubreisach, which appears to be occupied in force.

ALLIES EFFECT JUNCTURE; BRITISH, FRENCH AND BELGIAN FIGHT AS ONE UNIT NOW

Location of Troops of the Three Armies Not Revealed, But Crossing of Frontier is Confirmed By War Office—Will Act Together In Future Operations—Are Welcomed.

Brussels, August 10.—Belgian official reports received by the war office record the important fact that a junction has been effected by British, Belgian and French troops across the line of the German advance through Belgium. The location of the troops of the three armies is not revealed, but in any future operations, it is understood, they will act together.

Reports reach here by way of London that according to announcements made public in Berlin, Liege had fallen into the hands of the German troops.

GERMANS ARE ACTIVE.

The sighting of a German cavalry patrol to the south of Namur was evidence to the activity of the German forces in Luxemburg, showing that they were reconnoitering to discover the position of the defending armies.

In the meantime, the French troops who have crossed the frontier of Belgium continued to advance methodically, and their approach strengthens the position of the Belgian army from hour to hour.

A French officer arrived from Namur in an automobile today, and the populace hoisted him on their shoulders and carried him through the streets of the city.

It was reported today that the greater part of Luxemburg had been cleared of the invaders by the advance of the French army.

In the Belgian camp patriotic enthusiasm increases daily, and men of all classes are volunteering for service.

A number of troop trains filled with French soldiers passed around Brussels during the night on their way to the front.

Two Belgian officers charged with important missions passed through the advance lines of the Germans uninjured, although they drew the fire of the German troops.

The Belgian aviator, Alfred Lansor, was today arrested on suspicion of being a spy.

In Flanders groups of women gather all day in front of the chapels praying for the success of the allies.

It was reported here today that the German commanders hitherto have pushed to the front the regiments from Hanover and Mecklenburg, keeping the Prussian regiments in reserve as they did in the war of 1870.

At Antwerp four German officers wearing Belgian uniforms were arrested today.

LATEST WIRES TUESDAY EVENING

German army moved towards Waterloo. Now on the defensive looking for new road into France.

French artillery being rushed to front through Brussels. Meuse river banks lined with German dead.

Austrians have retired to their own front, awaiting offensive move by Servia.

French still masters of northern Alsace.

Fighting on German Russian frontier.

Reported six carloads of German prisoners taken into Russia.

State of war has been proclaimed in Southern Holland.

London Times says Britain has 500,000 to 600,000 men under arms, exclusive of reserve.

No naval news.

REV. C. W. G. MOORE RESIGNS

Rector of St. Luke's Leaves for England

The many friends of Rev. C. W. G. Moore, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Red Deer, will hear of his resignation with sincere regret. Mr. Moore had sent in his resignation, as he wished to spend some months in the Old Land, but had been persuaded to accept leave of absence by a unanimous vote of the vestry. When war broke out, with all its uncertainties, he asked that his resignation be accepted, and this was done on Thursday evening last. Coming from a family of born fighters, with three brothers in the fore front of the war, two in the army, and one a recently appointed commander in the navy, he felt he must at once proceed to his home in England where he might be needed. St. Luke's Church was filled to hear his farewell sermon on Sunday night, and after the service a meeting of the congregation and friends was held in the Parish Hall to give all a chance to bid the reverend gentleman good-bye and wish him God speed on his journey. The chair was taken by the rector's warden, J. A. Carswell, who paid a high tribute to the worth of Mr. Moore, and stated that the splendid Parish Hall would ever stand as a monument to his memory in Red Deer. Short addresses were given by R. B. Welliver, Edward Wilton, people's warden, Dr. John Collison, and William Piper. Mr. Welliver spoke of the Boy Scout movement, and the noble work Mr. Moore had done as Scout leader and also of his connection with the athletic clubs of the city, and sincerely regretted his departure. Dr. Collison spoke of Mr. Moore's worth as a man and the splendid British spirit which impelled him to hasten to the Mother Land. After Mr. Moore had made a brief farewell address, the meeting closed with the hymn "God be with you till we meet again."

On Monday evening Mr. Moore took the six o'clock train for the north. There was a large number of friends at the depot to see him off. The Boy Scouts were also present, headed by the Union Jack, and after bidding their leader good-bye they gave him three cheers and a tiger; and it is unnecessary to add that there were cheerful faces present that masked aching hearts as the train pulled out, but the youthful Scouts, headed by the glorious old flag, marched back through the city to quarters like old veterans who know they have done their duty and can leave the rest to the Great Captain.

Canada May Buy Dreadnoughts Now Building in British Shipyards

Ottawa, August 8.—A new suggestion with regard to the form of Canadian aid to Great Britain in the present crisis is being discussed here unofficially. The British fleet must, of course, go into action at the outset without any Canadian ships, owing to the killing of the Borden Naval Aid Bill by Laurier. It will be recalled, however, that Premier Borden announced to the House that the Government would carry out its purpose at some future time, and Parliament was given to understand that the Dominion would be given an opportunity to provide the cost of three Dreadnoughts to be built at once by the Admiralty. At the same time the Admiralty advanced the date of the laying down of three Dreadnoughts on their own programme, and these ships are now nearing completion. The suggestion now made is that more effective means of aid is available. There are now being rapidly completed in British shipyards for foreign powers three of the most powerful superdreadnoughts afloat. These are the Almirante Latorre and the Almirante Cochrane, each of 28,000 tons, built at Elswick for the Government of Chili, carrying each ten 14-inch guns, and the Reshadieh, built at Barrow for Turkey, carrying ten 13 1-2 inch guns.

In all probability the Admiralty, if need arises, will take over these three ships. The suggestion here is that Canada should become the owner of them.

DANISH CHILDREN SHOT.

Paris, August 8.—Count Albert De Man, one of the Conservative leaders in the chamber of deputies, writes over his signature to a newspaper here today: "It was related to me by a friend that twelve Danish children who were on a German train going to the frontier, carried away by the imprudence of their youth and the fervor of their young hearts, shouted, 'Vive La France.' They were immediately dragged out of the train and four of them were picked out and shot."

Denison May Lead Canadians

Reports that Gen. Lessars Would Take Command Receive no Confirmation

He Has Experience Only With Cavalry

Ottawa, August 7.—Reports sent out that Brigadier-General Lessard will command the first Canadian division for actual service are without official confirmation nor is such an appointment probable. While Gen. Lessard is an excellent soldier, his active service experience has been confined solely to one arm of the service, cavalry. In the present war, cavalry will not play the important part that it did in South Africa. Nor is it it likely that Col. Sam Hughes will command.

While willing and anxious to go, his colleagues feel that he cannot be spared from the militia office at the present time, when experience and familiarity with the organization of forces are necessary. The Duke of Connaught would like very much to lead the Canadian division. He is rated as one of Britain's best soldiers, but again it is a question of advisability of vacating his present post.

No appointment has yet been made but will be in a few days. Gen. Lessard will probably command the cavalry.

Col. Septimus Denison is looked upon by many military men as likely to command the Canadian division. Col. Denison comes from a well known military family and has had a splendid experience in active service. In South Africa he saw service at Paardeberg, Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, and for a time served on the staff of Lord Roberts.

A strict censor of all news is now on in the militia and naval departments, although it is known that mobilization is going along smoothly. About next Thursday the selection of corps, companies and officers for the first division will be made.

Football

Replayed Game, Firemen vs. Canadians

The replayed game between the Firemen and Canadians on Thursday was won by the Firemen by 6 goals to 2. Most people will be surprised at so many goals being scored, but it does not follow that there was that much difference between the teams. That the Firemen were the best team is a certainty, and they well deserved their win, but some of the goals they scored were gifts. The game started with the Canadians playing only ten men, but they succeeded in scoring the first goal, although in the opinion of some the ball did not go through the posts, but the referee did not appear to be in doubt and allowed the goal to stand. The game had only continued a few minutes, when the referee pulled up one of the Canadians for a foul (this was undoubtedly a mistake on his part). Scott took the kick and put the ball through out of the goalkeeper's reach, the backs not appearing to cover their goal at all. This equalizer caused a demonstration of joy among the Firemen, and it was not long before they scored another goal, again from a foul kick, the goalkeeper handling the ball, but not being able to direct its course. Two regrettable incidents occurred during the first half. The referee had occasion to caution Horne of the Firemen and Malcolm of the Canadians for rough play, and on Horne repeating the offence he was sent off the field. The other incident occurred five minutes from half time. The Firemen were pressing and one of them put in a shot which struck the south goal post, the ball dropping to the ground inside the line. The referee, thinking the ball was over the line, blew his whistle, and one of the Firemen rushing up kicked the ball through the goal. The referee, finding he had made a mistake, proceeded to throw the ball down, when Chief Meeres called him a crook, or words to that effect, and he refused to officiate any longer. Quite a rumous ensued over this incident, and some very plain talk was exchanged between the Chief and some of the football executive, the parties appearing to be worked up to a high pitch. By request, Mr. Hadley took charge of the game and, throwing the ball down close to the post, the Firemen secured possession and scored again.

Half time was called shortly afterwards.

The second half was again in favor of the Firemen, who scored three times to the Canadian's once, winning, as stated, by 6 to 2.

The game was a better one than it appears on paper, and to all appearances was played in a very friendly spirit, and had it not been for the interference of spectators it would have passed off alright. A. Heyward was referee until the trouble, and as far as our judgment goes was fair but over-anxious.

Directors of Fair Meet

Momentous Discussions

The Directors of the Red Deer Fair, under the presidency of J. F. W. Day, met in the Board of Trade rooms on Thursday afternoon and discussed the advisability as to whether they were justified in having a Fair this year considering the altered conditions brought about by the war.

The meeting lasted until six o'clock, and was then adjourned until 7.30. The financial question was discussed from every side, but the bone of contention was a bond submitted by the Merchants Bank to be signed by the Directors. The majority of those present refused to sign it, although some considered they should do so, feeling that matters had gone too far, and the date of the Fair too close, to call it off. They believed it would be a disastrous blow to the reputation of the Red Deer Fair, considered by many to be the best in the province; and further they felt it was up to the Directors to see the matter right through as they were already responsible for having spent a considerable amount of money. On the other hand it was felt that money was so tight that there was a doubt if the government would be able to come through with the grant, or the city either. The Secretary had prepared a statement showing that given the same conditions as last year the Directors would have to face a possible deficit of $1,000. At this stage it looked as if the Fair would have to go for this year, but President J. F. Day and Director W. E. Lord came to the rescue by offering to finance the Fair for this year on condition that the other Directors put in their own personal cheques for the sum of $50 by August 18th, Directors Day and Lord becoming responsible for any deficit over $1,000. The cheques of the Directors present were immediately written out, and Messrs. Welliver and Cunningham were appointed a committee to bring the guarantee to a finish.

President Day expressed the opinion that "this would be some fair," but that it was necessary for them to have loyal support from the citizens of the district to make it a success. There is no question but what it will be all the Directors say it will, and there is no question either but what it will get the most loyal support of the people, for it would be a disgrace to each of us individually if we neglected to do our part towards its support and allowed the Directors to carry the burden. They have done their part—we must do ours, and do it right.

KAISER'S CAVALRY MOWED DOWN

In Midst of Terrific Storm Battle of Liege Continues; German Loss Put at 20,000

Five Thousand of These are Prisoners.---By Mutual Consent Opposing Forces Declare Armistice of Two Hours to Bury Their Dead and Collect Wounded.----Conflict Is Now Raging With Greater Fierceness Than on Other Days of Attack.---Seven Shattered Regiments of Kaiser's Dashing Uhlans Captured.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—The Admiralty again denied the report of the Battle in the North Sea.

ROTTERDAM, Aug. 8.—Returning from the front this morning the Ninth Regiment of the Army defending Liege paraded the streets of Antwerp, each soldier carrying a German Helmet on his bayonet. There was great patriotic enthusiasm. The vast throng cheered and wept.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 9.—The Belgians are still on top at Liege. French reinforcements arrive. English coming. Belgians say they will hold Liege indefinitely.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 8.—The Germans attacking Liege suffered a loss of 20,000 men killed, wounded and prisoners, so the Belgian War Ministry announced today. The following official statement was issued: "The Germans lost, according to our estimate, 15,000 killed and injured at Liege. Our losses are much smaller. We have taken about 5,000 prisoners. The report that the Germans asked for an armistic of 24 hours is untrue. By mutual consent both armies suspended operations for two hours last evening to gather the wounded. No forts have been captured by the Germans, but their artillery has caused great damage and killed many non-combatants as well as soldiers. The conflict continues."

ASSAULT IS RENEWED

German artillery bombarded Liege and its protecting forts throughout the night. The assault on the city was renewed at dawn today in the midst of a terrific storm. A heavy rain is falling and swelling the river Meuse and its tributaries. This will impede the German advance. The conflict is raging with greater fierceness than on the other days of attack. An official report to the war ministry states that a division of German cavalry crossed the Meuse north of Liege and was surprised and practically annihilated by the Belgian cavalry and infantry, supported by a battery of light artillery. The German rout was complete, the Belgians capturing more than 5,000 prisoners from the seven shattered regiments of the Kaiser's dashing Uhlans.

GERMAN CAVALRY MOWED DOWN

The German cavalry fought bravely but were mowed down by the Belgian batteries as they charged at full speed. They twice attempted to break the ranks of Belgian forces but each time they were hurled back with heavy losses. While the Uhlans were charging the Belgian infantry in face of the murderous machine guns and rifle fire they were struck on the left flank by 3,000 Belgian cavalry that had arrived from Louvain, where King Albert's troops are concentrated for the defence of Brussels.

Fort Fleron, battered by hundreds of German shells, is isolated from the rest of the fortifications. The little garrison is fighting desperately.

Every open space between the defending forts proved a death trap for the Germans. In trenches protected by barbed wire and mines the Belgians repulsed numerous attacks in the direction of Bressoux today.

THE CHALICE OF COURAGE

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

A Masterly Romance of a Man and a Maid Alone in the Mountains of Colorado

thing now is to decide on what's to be done."

"My plan," said Armstrong, "is to go to the old camp.

"Yep," said Kirkby, "that's a good point of deeparture, as my seafarin' father down Cape Cod way used to say; an' wot's next?"

"I am going up the canon instead of down," said the man, with a flash of inspiration.

"That ain't no bad idea, nuther," assented the old man. "We looked the ground over pretty thoroughly down the canon. Mebbe we can find something up it."

"And what do you propose to take with you?" asked Maitland.

"What we can carry on the backs of men. We will make a camp somewhere about where you did. We can get enough husky men up at Morrison who will pack in what we want, and with that as a basis we will explore the upper reaches of the range."

"And when do we start?"

"There is a train for Morrison in two hours," answered Armstrong. "We can get what we want in the way of sleeping bags and equipment between now and then, if we hurry about it."

"Ef we are goin' to do it, we might as well git a move on us," assented Kirkby, making ready to go.

"Right," answered Robert Maitland grimly. "When three men set out to make fools of themselves, the sooner they get at it and get over with it the better. I've got some business matters to settle. You two got what's-needed, and I'll bear my share."

A week later a little band of men on snow shoes, wrapped in furs to their eyes, every one heavily burdened with a pack, staggered into the clearing where once had been pitched the Maitland camp. The place was covered with snow, of course, but on a shelf of rock half way up the hogback, they found a comparatively level clearing, and there, all working like beavers, they built a rude hut which they covered with canvas and then with tightly packed snow, and which would keep the three who remained from freezing to death. Fortunately they were favored with a brief period of pleasant weather, and a few days served to make a sufficiently habitable camp. Maitland, Kirkby and Armstrong worked with the rest. There was no thought of search at first; their lives depended upon the erection of a suitable shelter, and it was not until the helpers, leaving their burdens behind them, had departed, that the three men even considered what was to be done next.

"We must begin a systematic search tomorrow," said Armstrong decisively, as the three men sat around the cheerful fire in the hut.

"Yes," assented Maitland. "Shall we go together, or separately?"

"Separately, of course. We are all hardy and experienced men. Nothing is apt to happen to us. We will meet here every night and plan the next day's work. What do you say, Kirkby?"

The old man had been quietly smoking while the others talked. He smiled at them in a way which aroused their curiosity and made them feel that he had news for them.

"While you was puttin' the finishin' touches on this yere camp, I come acrost a heap o' stuns that somehow the wind had swept bare, there was a big rift in front of it which kep' us from seein' it afore; it was built up in the open w'ere there was no trees, an' in our lumberin' operations we wasn't lookin' that a-way. I came acrost it by any chance an—"

"Well, for God's sake, old man," cried Armstrong, impatiently, "what did you find, anything?"

"This," answered Kirkby, carefully producing a folded scrap of paper from his leather vest.

Armstrong fell on it ravenously, and as Maitland bent to him, they both read these words by the firelight.

"WM. BERKELY NEWBOLD."

"Thank God!" exclaimed Robert Maitland.

"You called me a fool, Kirkby," said Armstrong, his eyes gleaming. "What do you think of it now?"

"It's the fools, I find," said Kirkby sapiently, "that gener'ly gits there. Providence seems to be a-watchin' over 'em."

"You said you chanced on this paper, Jack," continued Maitland. "It looks like the deliberate intention of Almighty God."

"I reckon so," answered the other, simply. "You see He's got to look after all the fools on earth to keep 'em from doin' too much damage to themselves an' to others in this yere crooked trail of a world."

"Let us start now," urged Armstrong.

"'Tain't possible," said the old man, taking another puff at his pipe, and only a glistening of the eye betrayed the joy that he felt; otherwise his phlegmatic calm was unbroken, his demeanor just as undisturbed as it always was. "We'd jest throw away our lives a-wanderin' round these yere mountains in the dark. We've got to have light, an' clear weather. Ef it should be snowin' in the mornin' we'd have to wait until it cleared."

"I won't wait a minute," said Armstrong. "At daybreak, weather or no weather, I start."

"What's your hurry, Jim?" continued Kirkby, calmly. "The gal's safe; one day more or less ain't goin' to make no difference."

"She's with another man," answered Armstrong quickly.

"Do you know this Newbold?" asked Maitland, looking at the note again.

"No, not personally, but I have heard of him."

"I know him," answered Kirkby quickly, "an' you've seed him too, Bob; he's the feller that shot his wife, that married Louise Rosser."

"That man!"

"The very same."

"You say you never saw him, Jim?" asked Maitland.

"I repeat I never met him," said Armstrong, flushing suddenly; "but I knew him wife."

"Yes, you did that—" drawled the old mountaineer.

"What do you mean?" flushed Armstrong.

"I mean that you knowed her, that's all," answered the old man with an innocent air that was almost childlike.

When the others woke up in the morning Armstrong's sleeping bag was empty. Kirkby crawled out of his own warm nest, opened the door and peered out into the storm.

"Well," he said, "I guess the damn fool has beat God this time. It don't look to me as if even He could save him now."

"What Do You Mean?" Flushed Armstrong.

"But we must go after him at once," urged Maitland.

"See for yourself," answered the old man, throwing wider the door. "We've got to wait 'til this wind dies down, unless we give the Almighty the job o' lookin' after three instid o' one."

CHAPTER XX.

The Converging Trails.

Whatever the feeling of the others, Armstrong found himself unable to sleep that night. It seemed to him that fate was about to play him the meanest and most fantastic of tricks. Many times before in his crowded life he had loved other women, or so he characterized his feelings, but his passion for Louise Rosser Newbold had been in a class by itself until he had met Enid Maitland. Between the two there had been many women, but these two were the high points, the rest was lowland.

Once before, therefore, this Newbold had set in ahead of him and had won the woman he loved. Armstrong had cherished a hard grudge against him for a long time. He had not been of those who had formed the rescue party led by old Kirkby and Maitland which had buried the poor woman on the great butte in the deep canon. Before he got back to the camp the whole affair was over and Newbold had departed. Luckily for him, Armstrong had always thought, for he had been so mad with grief and rage and jealousy that if he had come across him, helpless or not, he would have killed him out of hand.

Armstrong had soon enough forgotten Louise Rosser, but he had not forgotten Newbold. All his ancient animosity had flamed into instant life again, at the sight of his name last night. The insistency of his hatred had been in no way abated by the lapse of time, it seemed.

Everybody in the mining camp had supposed that Newbold had wandered off and perished in the mountains, else Armstrong might have pursued him and hunted him down. The sight of his name on that piece of paper was outward and visible evidence that he still lived. It had almost the shock of a resurrection, and a resurrection to hatred rather than to love. If Newbold had been alone in the world, if Armstrong had chanced upon him in the solitude, he would have hated him just as he did, but when he thought that his ancient enemy was with the woman he now loved, with a growing intensity beside which his former resentment seemed weak and feeble he hated him yet the more.

He could not tell when the notice, which he had examined carefully, was written; there was no date upon it, but he could come to only one conclusion. Newbold must have found Enid Maitland alone in the mountains very shortly after her departure, and he had her with him in his cabin alone for at least a month. Armstrong gritted his teeth at the thought. He did not undervalue the personality of Newbold. He had never happened to see him, but he had heard enough about him to understand his qualities as a man. The tie that bound Armstrong to Enid Maitland was a strong one, but the tie by which he held her to him, if indeed he held her at all, was very tenuous and easily broken; perhaps it was broken already, and so he hated him still more and more.

Indeed, his animosity was so great and growing that for the moment he took no joy in the assurance of the girl's safety; yet he was not altogether an unfair man, and in calmer moments he thanked God in his own rough way that the woman he loved was alive and well, or had been when the note was written. He rejoiced that she had not been swept away with the flood or that she had not been lost in the mountains and forced to wander on finally to starve and freeze and die. In one moment her nearness caused his heart to throb with joyful anticipation. The certainty that at the first flush of day he should seek her again sent the warm blood to his cheeks. But those thoughts would be succeeded by the knowledge that she was with his enemy. With this man rob him of the latest love as he had robbed him of the first? Perhaps the hardest task that was ever laid upon Armstrong was to lie quietly in his sleeping bag and wait until the morning.

So came as the first indication of dawn showed over the crack of the door, he slipped quietly out of his sleeping bag and without disturbing the others drew on his boots, put on his heavy fur coat and cap and gloves, slung his Winchester and his snow shoes over his shoulder, and without stopping for a bite to eat, softly opened the door, stepped out and closed it after him. It was quite dark in the bottom of the canon, although a few pale gleams overhead indicated the near approach of day. It was quite still, too. There were clouds on the mountain top heavy with threat of wind and snow.

The way was not difficult, the direction of it, that is. Nor was the going very difficult at first; the snow was frozen and the crust was strong enough to bear him. He did not need his snow shoes, and, indeed, would have had little chance to use them in the narrow, broken, rocky pass. He had slipped away from the others because he wanted to be first to see the man and the woman. He did not want any witnesses to that meeting. They would have come on later, of course; but he wanted an hour or two in private with Enid and Newbold without any interruption. His conscience was not clear. Nor could he settle upon a course of action.

How much Newbold knew of his former attempt to win away his wife, how much of what he knew he had told Enid Maitland, Armstrong could not surmise. Putting himself into Newbold's place and imagining that the engineer had possessed entire information, he decided that he must have told everything to Enid Maitland as soon as he had found out the quasi relation between her and Armstrong. And Armstrong did not believe the woman he loved could be in anybody's presence a month without telling something about him. Still, it was possible that Newbold knew nothing, and that he told nothing therefore.

The situation was paralyzing to a man of Armstrong's decided, determined temperament. He could not decide upon the line of conduct he should pursue. His course in this, the most critical emergency he had ever faced, must be determined by circumstances of which he felt with savage resentment he was in some measure the sport. He would have to leave to chance what ought to be subject to his will. Of only one thing he was sure—he would stop at nothing, murder, lying; nothing, to win the woman, and to settle his score with that man.

There was really only one thing he could do, and that was to press on up the canon. He had no idea how far it might be or how long a journey he would have to make before he reached that shelf on the high hill where stood that hut in which she dwelt. As the crow flies, it could not be a great distance, but the canon zigzagged through the mountains with as many curves and angles as a lightning flash. He plodded on, therefore, with furious haste, recklessly speeding over places where a misstep in the snow or a slip on the icy rocks would have meant death or disaster to him.

He had gone about an hour, and had perhaps made four miles from the camp when the storm burst upon him. It was now broad day, but the sky was filled with clouds and the air with driving snow. The wind whistled down the canon with terrific force. It was with difficulty that he made any headway at all against it. It was a local storm; if he could have looked through the snow he would have discovered calmness on the top of the peaks. It was one of those sudden squalls of wind and snow which rage with terrific force while they last, but whose rage was limited, and whose violent duration would be short.

A less determined man than he would have bowed to the inevitable and sought some shelter behind a rock until the fury of the tempest was spent, but there was no storm that blew that could stop this man so long as he had strength to drive against it. So he bent his head to the fierce blast and struggled on. There was something titanic and magnificent about this iron determination and persistence of Armstrong. The two most powerful passions which move humanity were at his service; love led him and hate drove him. And the two were so intermingled that it was difficult to say which predominated, now one and now the other. The resultant of the two forces, however, was an onward move that would not be denied.

His fur coat was soon covered with snow and ice, the sharp needles of the storm cut his face wherever it was exposed. The wind forced its way through his garments and chilled him to the bone. He had eaten nothing since the night before, and his vitality was not at its flood, but he pressed on, and there was something grand in his indomitable progress. Excelsior!

Back in the hut Kirkby and Maitland sat around the fire waiting most impatiently for the wind to blow itself out and for that snow to stop falling through which Armstrong struggled forward. As he followed the windings of the canon, not daring to ascend to the summit on either wall and seek short cuts across the range, he was sensible that he was constantly rising. There were many indications to his experienced mind; the decrease in the height of the surrounding pines, the increasing rarity of the fir, the growing difficulty in breathing under the sustained exertion he was making, the quick throbbing of his accelerated heart, all told him he was approaching his journey's end.

He judged that he must now be drawing near the source of the stream, and that he would presently come upon the shelter. He had no means of ascertaining the time. He would not have dared to unbutton his coat to glance at his watch, and it is difficult to measure the flying minutes in such scenes as those through which he passed, but he thought he must have gone at least seven miles in perhaps three hours, which he fancied had elapsed, his progress in the last two having been frightfully slow. Every foot of advance he had had to fight for.

Suddenly a quick turn in the canon, a passage through a narrow entrance between lofty cliffs, and he found himself in a pocket or a circular amphitheater which he could see was closed on the farther side. The bottom of this enclosure or valley was covered with pines, now drooping under tremendous burdens of snow. In the midst of the pines a lakelet was frozen solid; the ice was covered with the same dazzling carpet of white.

He could have seen nothing of this had not the sudden storm now stopped as precipitately almost as it had begun. Indeed, accustomed to the grayness of the snow fall, his eyes were fairly dazzled by the bright light of the sun, now quite high over the range, which struck him full in the face.

He stopped, panting, exhausted, and leaned against the rocky wall of the canon's mouth which here rose sheer over his head. This certainly was the end of the trail, the lake was the source of the frozen rivulet along whose rocky and torn banks he had tramped since dawn. Here, if anywhere, he would find the object of his quest.

Refreshed by a brief pause, and encouraged by the sudden stilling of the storm, he stepped out of the canon and ascended a little knoll whence he had a full view of the pocket over the tops of the pines. Shading his eyes from the light with his hand as best he could, he slowly swept the circumference with his eager glance, seeing nothing until his eye fell upon a huge broken trail of rocks projecting from the snow, indicating the ascent to a broad shelf of the mountains across the lake to the right. Following this he saw a huge block of snow which suggested dimly the outlines of a hut!

Was that the place? Was she there? He stared fascinated and as he did so a thin curl of smoke rose above the snow heap and wavered up in the cold, quiet air! That was a human habitation, then. It could be none other than the hut referred to in the note. Enid Maitland must be there; and Newbold!

The lake lay directly in front of him beyond the trees at the foot of the knoll, and between him and the slope that led up to the hut. If it had been summer, he would have been compelled to follow the water's edge to the right or the left; both journeys would have led over difficult trails, with little to choose between them, but the lake was now frozen hard and covered with snow. He had no doubt that the snow would bear him, but to make sure he drew his snow shoes from his shoulder, slipped his feet in the straps, and sped straight on through the trees and across it like an arrow from a bow.

In five minutes he was at the foot of the giant stairs. Kicking off his snow shoes, he scrambled up the broken way, easily finding in the snow a trail which had evidently been passed and repassed daily. In a few moments he was at the top of the shelf. A hard trampled path ran between high walls of snow to a door!

Behind that door what would he find? Just what he brought to it, love and hate, he fancied. We usually find on the other side of doors the more and no less than we bring to our own sides. But whatever was there there was no hesitation in Armstong's course. He ran toward it, laid his hand on the latch, and opened it.

What creatures of habit we are! Early in that same morning, after one vain attempt again to influence the woman who was now the deciding and determining factor, and who seemed to be taking the man's place, Newbold, ready for his journey, had torn himself away from her presence and had plunged down the giant stair. He had done everything that mortal man could do for her comfort; wood enough to last her for two weeks had been taken from the cave and piled in the kitchen and everywhere so as to be easily accessible to her; the stores she already had and the run of, and he had fitted a stout bar to the outer door which would render it impregnable to any attack that might be made against it, although he saw no quarter from which any assault impended.

Enid had recovered not only her strength, but a good deal of her nerve. That she loved this man and that he loved her had given her courage. She would be fearfully lonely, of course, but not so much afraid as before. The month of immunity in the mountains without any interruptions had dissipated any possible apprehensions on her part. It was with a sinking heart, however, that she saw him go at last.

They had been so much together in that month; they had learned what love was. When he came back it would be different, he would not come alone. The first human being he met would bring the world to the door of the lonely but beloved cabin in the mountains—the world with its questions, its inference, its suspicions, its denunciations and its accusations! Some kind of an explanation would have to be made, some sort an answer would have to be given, some solution of the problem would have to be arrived at. What these would be she could not tell.

Newbold's departure was like the end of an era to her. The curtain dropped; when it rose again what was to be expected? There was no comfort except in the thought that she loved him. So long as their affections matched and ran together nothing else mattered. With the solution of it all next to her sadly beating heart she was still supremely confident that love, or God—and there was not so much difference between them as to make it worth while to mention the one rather than the other—would find the way.

Their leave taking had been singularly cold and abrupt. She had realized the danger he was apt to incur and she had exacted a reluctant promise from him that he would be careful.

"Don't throw your life away, don't risk it even, remember that it is mine," she had urged.

And just as simply as she had enjoined it upon him he had promised. He had given his word that he would not send help back to her but that he would bring it back, and she had confidence in that word. A confidence that had he been inclined to break his promise would have made it absolutely impossible. There had been a long clasp of the hands, a long look in the eyes, a long breath in the breast, a long throb in the heart and then—farewell. They dared no more.

Once before he had left her and she had stood upon the plateau and followed his vanishing figure with anxious troubled thought until it had been lost in the depths of the forest below. She had controlled herself in this second parting for his sake as well as her own. Under the ashes of his grim repression she realized the presence of live coals which a breath would have fanned into flame. She dared nothing while he was there, but when he shut the door behind him the necessity for self-control was removed. She had laid her arms on the table and bowed her head upon them and shook and quivered with emotions unrelieved by a single tear—weeping was for lighter hearts and less severe demands!

His position after all was the easier of the two. As of old it was the man who went forth to the battlefield while the woman could only wait passively for the issue of the fight. Although he was half blinded with emotions he had to give some thought to his progress, and there was yet one task to be done before he could set forth upon his journey toward civilization and rescue.

It was fortunate, as it turned out, that this obligation detained him. He was that type of a merciful man whose mercies extended to his beasts. The poor little burros must be attended to and their safety assured so far as it could be, for it would be impossible for Enid Maitland to care for them. Indeed he had already exacted a promise from her that she would not leave the plateau and risk her life on the icy stairs with which she was so unfamiliar.

He had gone to the corral and shaken down food enough for them which if it had been doled out to them day by day would have lasted longer than the week he intended to be absent; of course he realized that they would eat it up in half that time, but even so they would probably suffer not too great discomfort before he got back.

All these preparations took some little time. It had grown somewhat late in the morning before he started. There had been the storm raging when he first looked out and at her earnest solicitation he had delayed his departure until it had subsided.

His tasks at the corral were at last completed; he had done what he could for them both, nothing now remained but to make the quickest and safest way to the settlement. Shouldering the pack containing his axe and gun and sleeping bag and such provision as would serve to tide him over until he reached human habitations, he set forth. He did not look up to the hut, indeed he could not have seen it for the corral was almost directly beneath it, but if it had been in full view he would not have looked back, he

Lord Kitchener Has Taken Charge of Britain's Military Movement

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Lord Kitchener today took charge of the war office, by virtue of his appointment as secretary for war, and assumed full control of military operations. The chief matter taken under consideration by him are the plans worked out for sending 150,000 British troops to Belgium to assist the army of King Albert, in repelling the German invasion. Lord Kitchener issued two decrees signed by King George. One revoked a measure prohibiting the importation of arms into Ireland. This measure was passed when the home rule crisis developed threats of a revolution in Ulster.

BRITAIN WINS FIRST NAVAL FIGHT

The first naval engagement between British and German ships in the North Sea resulted in a victory for Great Britain. The battle took place Wednesday off Dutch coast and lasted five hours.

Seventy English sailors were wounded, and it is reported that more than a hundred Germans were killed in the engagement.

The ships engaged were those of England's third flotilla and a flying squadron of German vessels which was sent out to protect mine laying operations of German ship.

The liner Koenig Louis which is equipped with mine-laying paraphernalia was sunk by British and a short time later two German boats surrendered.

The Amphion, flagship of England's flotilla, was the only British ship which sustained any noticeable damage.

ITALY MUST DECLARE HERSELF

Flash—Italy will fight Germany—London, Aug. 6. —The Foreign Office says Italy will refuse Germany's ultimatum and prepare for war. Fighting is proceeding all along the German frontier.

PARIS, Aug. 6.—Italy replied to Germany's ultimatum with a statement that Germany was the aggressor in the conflict with England and France, and says that there is no necessity for altering her decision to remain neutral, according to a Rome despatch received by a news agency here to-day.

GERMANY DEMANDS OBLIGATIONS

ROME, Aug. 6.---Germany to-day demanded that Italy fulfil her obligations as members of the Triple Alliance and join with her allies, Austria and Germany, in conflict with members of the Triple Entente.

Herr De Flotow, German Ambassador, presented to the Foreign Minister, Giuliano, a note from Berlin which is practically an ultimatum, that if Italy refused to act in accord with her obligations, Germany would be compelled to consider her in the same position as those nations with which she is openly at war.

WILL FIGHT AGAINST WORLD OF ENEMIES

Kaiser Says Germany Will Fight to Last Breath of Man and Horse

Berlin, August 7.—(Via London)—(1.15 p.m.)—A proclamation by Emperor William, addressed to the German nation, was published in the official Gazette today. The text was as follows:

"Since the foundation of the German empire it has been for forty-three years the object of the efforts of myself and my ancestors to preserve the peace of the world and to advance by peaceful means our vigorous development.

"Our adversaries, however, are jealous of the successes of our work and there has been latent hostility to the east and to the west and beyond the sea.

"This has been borne by us till now we were aware of our responsibility and our power. Now, however, these adversaries wish to humiliate us, asking that we should look on with folded arms and watch our enemies preparing themselves for the coming attack.

"They will not suffer that we maintain our resolute fidelity to our ally who is fighting for her position as a great power, and with whose humiliation our power and honor would equally be lost.

"So the sword must decide.

"In the midst of profitable peace the enemy surprises us. Therefore, to arms.

"Any dallying and temporizing would be to betray the fatherland.

"To be or not to be is the question for the empire which our fathers founded. To be or not to be is the question for German power and German existence.

"We shall resist to the last breath of man and horse, and we shall fight out the struggle even against a world of enemies.

"Never has Germany been subdued when she was united.

"Forward with God, who will be with us as he was with our ancestors."

Japan Prepares to Take Part in War

Tokio, August 7, 9.50 a.m.—The reserve army officers have been instructed to hold themselves in readiness for possible mobilization.

A flying squadron of seven cruisers has been organized at Okosuka. Prince Fushimi is in command.

The battleship squadron has been increased to eight vessels and is ready for service. Admiral Kato is in command.

The fortifications at Vladivostok, Asiatic Russia, and at Aigon, the French possession in China, have been strengthened to meet a possible bombardment of German warships, whose whereabouts are now unknown.

Guns Shatter Aeroplane

LIEGE, BELGIUM, Aug. 6.—In full view of King Albert, who was in conference with his staff, a German Aeroplane, carrying six German officers, was shattered by Belgium aerial guns. Its six occupants were killed. The aeroplane approached the city from the southeast and circled about over the forts defending Liege. The Belgian gunners waited until it came within range and then fired. At the second shot the machine was seen to fall.

Later it was reported from the fort near which it fell that one man was found alive. It is reported here that a squadron of Belgian Cavalry surprised Gen. Von Emmich and Staff and that the German Commander narrowly escaped capture. Seven of his officers were killed.

Belgians Completely Rout Germans

BRUSSELS, Aug. 6.—Via London.—The Gazette published today what it says are the facts so far as known regarding the repulse of the German forces by the Belgians in the Liege district yesterday. The German losses are estimated at 8000 men, while the Belgians suffered far less.

The alleged route of the German Seventh Army corps is not confirmed in its entirety, however, says the Gazette, these are the facts: The Belgian eleventh brigade after successfully resisting the German attack, pursued the fleeing Prussians with such energy that the Belgians were obliged to order troops to run back as they were getting outside the range of the guns of the Belgian forts. They suffered, however, considerable losses which are estimated at 8000. The Belgian losses were relatively small.

At four o'clock in the morning the German Tenth Army corps attacked the Chaudfontaine and Boucelles forts from the southeast while their artillery bombarded the fort at Flemalle, on the opposite bank of the River Mause, five miles southwest of Liege. The Belgians captured seven guns and several men.

GREAT BRITAIN JUSTIFIED IN GOING TO WAR.

Great Britain's declaration of war against Germany, last week, has been received with the greatest satisfaction by every section of the Empire. Germany tried to purchase Great Britain's neutrality by promising not to use her fleet for attacking the northern coast of France. The British Government would not enter into any such dishonorable agreement. If she stood idly by while Germany whipped France and Russia, she might have to look beseechingly for an ally when Germany turned her attention to her, which she would be sure to do as soon as she had settled with the other countries.

Then Great Britain, as one of the guarantors of Belgium's and Luxemburg's neutrality, has got to stand by these heroic little nations. Germany, with shameless disregard of international covenants, and brutal indifference to the fact that the hands of these little states are bound, rides roughshod over their rights. First, she strikes her main blow at France by invasion of Luxemburg, an act which the most barbaric nation would hardly be thought capable of. Next she proposes to use Belgium as a means of approach to France's unfortified border. Belgium has protested, as Luxemburg has protested, against this violation of the neutrality imposed upon them and guaranteed to them by a contract of the great powers. This high-handedness of Germany is particularly resented by Britain.

It may not be generally known to our readers that the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, the Kingdom of Belgium and the Swiss Confederation are all sovereign States save in the one particular that they are deprived of the right of offensive warfare. The Governments of all these States are precluded by treaty, to which the principal powers are parties, from attacking any nation. That disability is offset by a guarantee of immunity from attack, and Germany is a party to that guarantee. Great Britain would be forever disgraced if she should stand idly by and see this treaty, ruthlessly broken. Belgium's magnificent resistance to the overwhelming forces of the Kaiser has startled the world, and the news that British and French forces have arrived on the scene and will aid in the fierce battles that have been raging on the frontier to repel the German forces, will be received with pleasure by all British people. It looks as though Belgium was again to be the battlefield of the mighty armies that are marching towards each other, and if the allied armies can put up as fierce a fight as the heroic Belgians have done the past week, we have no doubt of the ultimate outcome.

PRACTICAL LOYALTY.

Sir J. Albert M. Aikins' offer, as telegraphed from Ottawa, to raise 7,000 men—4,000 infantry, 2,000 artillery and 1,000 of other arms—in Western Canada, is a demonstration of personal practical loyalty unequalled up to the present time in the war in which our Empire is engaged. The expense to Sir J. Albert of such an undertaking will run into the millions. We cannot see that our government will hesitate for a moment in accepting the generous offer of one of our wealthiest men. The offer transcends in its magnitude the generosity of the late Lord Strathcona at the time of the Boer war. Other millionaires have volunteered for service. Sir J. Albert is not only ready to go himself, but he places his princely fortune at the disposal of his country, surely an act worthy of the highest commendation.

CHIEF OF POLICE AND FINGER PRINTS.

A few weeks ago Chief Anderson arrested five men for vagrancy. He proved conclusively that the men were acting in a very suspicious manner, examing business premises, etc. He also pointed out that he had received instructions from the government to ask for heavy sentences. The result of the trial was that the men got four months each. There has been some dissatisfaction felt at this severe sentence, but that it was justified is now apparent. While the men were in the Chief's charge he took their finger prints, and forwarded the same to the government bureau at Ottawa. A few days ago he received word from Ottawa that James Morrison, one of the men, had been sentenced in Victoria, B. C., for robbery with violence, and John McRae, another of the men, had served a sentence of hard labor for theft in Champion, Alberta. The Chief now feels more than ever justified in his actions, for such men are a danger to the public and are better behind bars.

SELECTING THE MEN.

The order from Ottawa is that volunteers will be chosen in the following order: Unmarried men, married men without families, married men with families, with a standard age limit from eighteen to forty-five. Only those physically fit will be chosen. The probability is that unmarried men in excess of the number at present required will volunteer for service. However, proper encouragement is given to as many as possible to enlist. The orders of the militia department are common sense, and are endorsed by the public at large.

Enthusiastic Parade Of Citizens

The citizens of Red Deer, men, women and children, old and young, believed themselves of a little of the pent-up excitement and enthusiasm with which they were filled on account of the war, on Wednesday night, by parading the streets, singing patriotic airs, yelling, whistling, etc. The parade was altogether an unorganized one, and it was just marvellous where the number of people came from in so short a time. The Band had been having practice, and was playing a few patriotic airs on the streets that quickly attracted a crowd. The Sons of England were holding a meeting in the Parish Hall, the President, R. E. Fiske, being in the middle of a patriotic speech when a telephone message came that the citizens and Band were out. The Lodge was, by unanimous consent, immediately closed, and the members displaying their badges and headed by two very large Union Jacks, formed up in line and marched to the centre of the city, being met on the way by the Band and a crowd of citizens, who fell in line, swelling the procession to the extent of half a mile. The crowd marched to the armory, where a number of raw recruits were being put through their facings by Major Moore. The Band struck up O, Canada, The Maple Leaf and The King, the people joining in a very hearty manner.

Geo. W. Greene was then called upon for a speech, and very willingly obliged, rousing fresh enthusiasm. W. H. Hadley then sang the veterans' song, Long Live the King, all present taking up the chorus. A. R. Gibson followed this up with a patriotic speech, which was received with loud cheering. The Band by this time had been provided with a couple of good lights for street marching, and as the crowd had still lots of spare enthusiasm left, another parade through the streets was commenced, and was almost doubled in size to the first one. Many notable citizens will up in years were observed in the ranks, acting in as boisterous a manner as the young ones. The women and children were not to be done out of their part, and crowded the sidewalks, keeping in close touch with the parade all through the streets. Autos and rigs also joined in the happy throng; in fact the only people not present were those who had retired early and heard nothing of the doings. The favorite airs being sung were, Good-bye Dolly Gray, Soldiers of the King, We Have a Navy, Britons Never Shall Be Slaves, etc. On arriving at the armory a second time, the Band played the National Anthem and the Marseilles, bringing the rejoicings to a close for the time being. Everything had been of a very orderly character, nothing being done to hurt anyone's feelings. A number of the younger bloods had a march on their own, looking for fun, and finished up at the Cafe about midnight.

Weekly Market

Thursday's market proved another bumper. Goods of the finest kind were there in large quantities. Vegetables predominated and did not find very ready buyers. This was due to the fact that just at present practically every citizen has a quantity of vegetables growing in their own gardens. Potatoes, however, found a ready sale at 2c per lb. Mr. Besant had some splendid specimens of cauliflower, which sold quickly from 15c to 20c per head. A pleasing feature of the market is the steady and early attendance of buyers. The following prices ruled: Poultry, 16c lb. and upwards; butter, 22c to 25c; eggs, 25c; cauliflower, 15c to 20c per head; potatoes, 2c per lb.; onions, radishes, etc., 6 for 25c; rhubarb, 9 lbs. for 25c; mint, 3 for 10c; flowers, from 10c; spring lamb, 15c; bacon, 18c; boneless ham, 20c; salmon, 20c; halibut, 15c. Raspberries found a ready sale at good prices.

CANADA AT WAR; NATION AROUSED

Dominion is Astir From Coast to Coast For First Big Scrap

100,000 MEN CLAMOR TO GO

Col. Aikins Offers 7,000 Force---Government Buys Two Submarines

Ottawa—Canada's history is being made quickly nowadays. For the first time since the Dominion was organized it is in a state of war. The first emergency session ever held has been summoned for the consideration of measures made necessary by the outbreak of the greatest war the world has known. The Canada Gazette announced in simple and formal language that the governor-general had been informed by the secretary of state for the colonies that Great Britain is at war with Germany.

CANADA BUYS SHIPS.

An order-in-council proclaimed that H.M.S. Niobe and Rainbow had been placed at the disposal of his Majesty the King. A further order declared that "as an emergency exists the naval forces and the naval volunteer forces shall be placed immediately on active service."

The government announces that it has purchased from the Chilian government two submarines, just completed at Seattle, for the defence of the Pacific coast. These ships are even now at Esquimault.

100,000 HAVE VOLUNTEERED.

Orders have gone forth to the district officers commanding the various military districts of the Dominion for the immediate enlistment of a Canadian army division of 21,000 men, 13,000 of whom will be infantry, and the artillery, engineers, etc. Already it is estimated nearly 100,000 men have been offered for service. The senior officers, however, have been ordered to make careful selection, and it is the intention that every part of Canada shall be represented.

GUARD PORTS AND ELEVATORS

At Quebec trenches are being dug for the protection of the mobilizing troops, while 200 targets in one straight line are being erected at Valcartier for preliminary training in shooting. At Halifax, St. John, Sydney and the other ports of the Dominion feverish preparations are in progress for the protection of all vulnerable points. Detachments of militia have been stationed at all of Canada's canals to prevent damage or destruction at the hands of any hostile force. The great grain elevators at the head of the lakes, at Montreal and elsewhere, in which are stored Canada's available wheat supply, are also under guard.

COL. AIKINS OFFERS 7,000.

Colonel Sir James Aikins wired that he was prepared to raise a brigade of troops, consisting of 4,000 infantry, 2,000 cavalry, and 1,000 artillery, and recommended that Col. Steele, of Winnipeg, be placed in command of it. Hon. Clifford Sifton sent word stating that he was ready for any service which might be required of him, and declared that he would report at militia headquarters tomorrow morning. Lady Drummond sent a wireless message from the Carpathian, off Cape Race, stating that she was ready to provide a contingent of six or eight nurses and take complete responsibility for the expense. Mr. Justice Meredith, of Toronto, is also among those whose names have been received by the department. Almost every militia, reserve and veteran unit in the Dominion has offered itself for service.

MUST BE MARKSMEN.

"The trouble is," said Colonel Sam Hughes, "that there are five times too many. We could raise 100,000 if they were needed. The problem will be selection." The volunteers will have to undergo a strict medical and marksmanship test. The age limit will be between 18 and 45 and the term of enlistment will be for the duration of the war.

Canada will await for orders from the British war office as to the disposition of the troops.

WAR TAX TALKED.

A war tax may be imposed in order that the falling revenues of the Dominion may be supplemented and the treasury replenished to meet the present conditions. This would take the form of stamps, two cents each, which would be affixed to cheques and other paper and to certain commodities such as playing cards, etc.

RAILWAY APPOINTMENTS

Mr. E. J. Chamberlin, President of the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific railways, announces the following important changes, effective today (Saturday, August 1st):

"Owing to the death of Mr. M. M. Reynolds, Vice-President in charge of Financing and Accounting, that position is abolished.

"Mr. Frank Scott is appointed Vice-President and Treasurer in charge of all finance of the company, reporting direct to the President."

Mr. Frank Scott, the new Vice-President, is widely known in general banking and financial circles as well as in the railway world. He is a member of a distinguished Montreal family, being the son of the late Dr. William E. Scott, M.D., for many years Professor of Anatomy at McGill University and Chief Medical Officer of the Grand Trunk Railway Company and is a brother of Canon Scott, of Quebec, one of the leading Canadian poets. Mr. Scott has been Treasurer of the Grand Trunk Railway for the past thirteen years, adding to that office Treasurership of the Grand Trunk Pacific in 1906. He entered railway service in 1879 as clerk in the audit department of the Grand Trunk and has risen steadily to the Vice-Presidency. In 1891 he was appointed Secretary of the Audit Board and Purchasing Committee. Two years later he was made Assistant Treasurer and succeeded Mr. Charles Percy as Treasurer in 1901. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Grand Trunk Pacific, Past President of the Society Railway Financial Officers of America and is a former Chairman of the St. James Club, Montreal.

Mr. Walter Hardman Ardley, the new comptroller, has, in his thirty years' service with the Grand Trunk, risen from the junior clerkship to his present position as chief of the whole accounting department of the big system. He entered railway service November 5th, 1884, and has been chief clerk and general bookkeeper in general auditor's office, 1893 to 1907; auditor of disbursements, 1907 to 1908; acting chief auditor, August 31st to December 31st, 1908, and general auditor Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways from January 1st, 1909, to date. He was recently appointed to the Board of Directors of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Another Successful Year For Western Canada College

This well known residential and day school for boys at Calgary has just closed another successful year, the eleventh since it was declared open by the Hon. Chief Justice Haultain (then Premier) in 1903.

During this session the high standing in work and discipline for which the College is so well known has been vigorously maintained. The different departments of the College report marked progress. The installation of technical manual training marks another step forward. When the autumn term opens this institution will have the very latest and best equipment for draughting and manual work. Arrangements are also being made for a preparatory department for small boys.

Some years ago a separate gymnasium was equipped, and a special instructor was engaged to give his whole time to physical training and proper discipline. Last year a well arranged shooting gallery was built for the special use of the cadet corps. These additions have won new favor among the parents and friends of the Western Canada College boys. The results are noted in the testimony of the District Commanding Officer of the Militia of Alberta. He declared the college cadet corps to be the best he had inspected and he did not except the militia.

The College continues its success in sending boys to the universities, into business, and the various leading lines of occupation. A Western Canada boy won the highest prize on graduating from the Royal Military College in June of the present year. This is a peculiar honor, for all the best residential schools send many of their best boys to this military college. This boy was for more than five years a scholar in Western Canada College. The results (in part) have come in from the McGill University matriculation examinations: a Western Canada boy is 9th among more than 500 candidates from all over Canada; another is 48th in the same examination.

Following the example of similar residential institutions, the college corporation seeks to remove from the confines of the city and build on their beautiful property, some four miles out in the country. Unfortunately the continued financial stringency has compelled delay. Sketch plans, however, have been prepared for new buildings to be erected on the new site of 35 acres. Before these were drawn a number of the best residential schools in Eastern Canada, the Eastern United States and Great Britain were visited and studied.

The College needs these improvements, for it is the largest, the oldest, and the best known College of its kind in Canada, between Winnipeg and Vancouver.

BRITAIN RIGHT IN WAGING WAR, SAYS CARNEGIE.

The World's Leading Peace Advocate Approves of Just War.

New York, August 7.—Andrew Carnegie, the world's most distinguished advocate of peace, approves of Great Britain's course in the present crisis. In a cable message from Scotland to the New York Evening Post, he says:

"Germany having declined Britain's proposed peace conference, and then having asked Britain to agree to her march through Belgium, Britain was bound to decline and to declare that she would protect Belgium by land and sea."

could not trust himself to, every instinct, every impulse in his soul would fain drag him back to that hut and to the woman. It was only his will and, did he but know it, her will that made him carry out his purpose.

He would have saved perhaps half a mile on his journey if he had gone straight across the lake to the mouth of the canon. We are creatures of habit. He had always gone around the lake on the familiar trail and unconsciously he followed that trail that morning. He was thinking of her as he plodded on in a mechanical way while the trail followed the border of the lake for a time, plunged into the woods, wound among the pines, at last reaching that narrow rift in the encircling wall through which the river flowed. He had passed along the trail oblivious to all his surroundings, but, as he came to the entrance he could not fail to notice what he suddenly saw in the snow.

Robinson Crusoe when he discovered the famous footprint of Man Friday in the sand was not more astonished at what met his vision than Newbold on that winter morning. For there, in the virgin whiteness, were the tracks of a man!

He stopped dead with a sudden contraction of the heart. Humanity other than he and she in that wilderness? It could not be! For a moment he doubted the evidence of his own senses. He shook his pack loose from his shoulders and bent down to examine the tracks to read if he could their indications. He could see that some one had come up the canon, that someone had leaned against the wall, that some one had gone on. Where had he gone?

To follow the new trail was child's play for him. He ran by the side of it until he reached the knoll. The stranger had stopped again, he had shifted from one foot to another, evidently he had been looking about him seeking some one, only Enid Maitland of course. The trail ran forward to the edge of the frozen lake, there the man had put on his snow shoes, there he had sped across the lake like an arrow, and like an arrow himself although he had left behind his own snow shoes, Newbold ran upon his track. Fortunately the snow crust upbore him. The trail ran straight to the foot of the rocky stairs. The newcomer had easily found his way there.

With beating heart and throbbing pulse, Newbold himself bounded up the acclivity after the stranger, marking as he did so evidences of the other's prior ascent. Reaching the top like him he ran down the narrow path and in his turn laid his hand upon the door.

He was not mistaken, he heard voices within. He listened a second and then flung it open, and as the other had done, he entered.

Way back on the trail, old Kirkby and Robert Maitland, the storm having ceased, were rapidly climbing up the canon. Fate was bringing all the actors of the little drama within the shadow of her hand.

CHAPTER XXI.

The Odds Against Him.

The noise of the opening of the door and the inrush of cold air that followed awoke Enid Maitland to instant action. She rose to her feet and faced the entrance through which she expected Newbold to reappear—for of course the newcomer must be he—and for the life of her she could not help that radiating flash of joy, the momentary anticipation of which fairly transfigured her being; although if she had stopped to reflect she would have remembered that not in the whole course of their acquaintance had Newbold ever entered her room at any time without knocking and receiving permission.

Some of that joy yet lingered in her lovely face when she tardily recognized the newcomer in the half light. Armstrong, scarcely waiting to close the door, sprang forward joyfully with his hands outstretched.

"Enid!" he cried.

Naturally he thought the look of expectant happiness he had surprised upon her face was for him and he accounted for its sudden disappearance by the shock of his unexpected, unannounced, abrupt, entrance.

The warm color had flushed her face, but as she stood at him her aspect rapidly changed. She grew paler. The happy light that had shone in her eyes faded away and as he approached her she shrank back.

"You!" she exclaimed almost in terror.

"Yes," he answered smilingly, "I have found you at last. Thank God you are safe and well. Oh, if you could only know the agonies I have gone through. I thought I loved you when I left you six weeks ago, but now—"

In eager impetuosity he drew nearer to her. Another moment and he would have taken her in his arms, but she would have none of him.

"Stop," she said with a cold and inflexible sternness that gave pause even to his buoyant joyful assurance.

"Why, what's the matter?"

"The matter? Everything, but—"

"No evasions, please," continued the man still cheerfully but with a growing misgiving. His suspicions, in abeyance for the moment because of his joy at seeing her alive and well, arose with renewed force. "I left you practically pledged to me," he resumed.

"Not so fast," answered Enid Maitland, determined to combat the lightest attempt to establish a binding claim upon her.

"Isn't it true?" asked Armstrong. "Here, wait," he said before she could answer, "I am half frozen, I have been searching for you since early morning in the storm." He unbuttoned and unbelted his huge fur coat as he spoke and threw it carelessly on the floor by his Winchester leaning against the wall. "Now," he resumed, "I can talk better."

"You must have something to eat then," said the girl.

She was glad of the interruption since she was playing for time. She did not quite know how the interview would end, he had come upon her so unexpectedly and she had never formulated what she would say to him, that which she felt she must say. She must have time to think, to collect herself, which he in his part was quite willing to give her, for he was not much better prepared for the interview than she. He really was hungry and tired, his early journey had been foolhardy and in the highest degree dangerous. The violence of his admiration for her added to the excitement of her presence, and the probable nearness of Newbold as to whose whereabouts he wondered were not conducive to rapid recuperation. It would be comfort to him also to have food and time.

"Sit down," she said. "I shall be back in a moment."

The fire of the morning was still burning in the stove in the kitchen; to heat a can of soup, to make him some buttered toast and hot coffee, were the tasks of a few moments; she brought them back to him, set them on the table before him and bade him fall to.

"By jove," exclaimed the man after a little time as he began to eat hastily but with great relish what she had prepared, while she stood over him watching him silently. "This is cozy. A warm, comfable room, something to eat served by the finest woman in the world, the prettiest girl on earth to look at—what more could a man desire? This is the way it's going to be always in the future."

"You have no warrant whatever for saying or hoping that," answered the girl slowly but decisively.

"Have I not?" asked the man quickly. "Did you not say to me a little while ago that you liked me better than any man you had ever met and that I might win you if I could? Well, I can, and what's more, I will in spite of yourself, Enid,"—he laughed, "Why, the memory of that kiss I stole from you makes me mad." He pushed the things before him and rose to his feet once more. "Come, give me another," he said, "it isn't in the power of woman to stand against a love like mine."

"Isn't it?"

"No, indeed."

"Louise Newbold did," she answered very quietly but with the swiftness and the dexterity of a sword thrust by a master hand, a mighty arm.

Armstrong stared at her in open mouthed astonishment.

"What do you know about Louise Rosser or Newbold?" he asked at last.

"All that I want to know."

"And did that damned hound tell you?"

"If you mean Mr. Newbold, he never mentioned your name, he does not know you exist."

"Where is he now?" thundered the man.

"Have no fear," answered the woman calmly, "he has gone to the settlements to tell them I am safe and to seek help to get me out of the mountains."

"Fear!" exclaimed Armstrong, proudly, "I fear nothing on earth. For years, ever since I heard his name in fact, I have longed to meet him. I want to know who told you about that woman—Kirkby?"

"He never mentioned your name in connection with her."

"But you must have heard it somewhere," cried the man thoroughly bewildered. "The birds of the air didn't tell it to you, did they?"

"She told me herself," answered Enid Maitland.

"She told you? Why, she's been dead in her grave five years, shot to death by that murderous dog of a husband of hers."

"A word with you, Mr. Armstrong," said the woman with great spirit. "You can't talk that way about Mr. Newbold; he saved my life twice over, from a bear and then in the cloudburst which caught me in the canon."

"That evens up a little," said Armstrong. "Perhaps for your sake I will spare him."

"You!" laughed the woman contemptuously. "Spare him? Be advised, look to yourself, if he ever finds out what I know, I don't believe any power on earth could save you."

"Oh," said Armstrong carelessly enough, although he was consumed with hate and jealousy and raging against her clearly evident disdain. "I can take care of myself, I guess. Anyway I only want to talk about you, not about him or her. Your father—"

"Is he well?"

"Well enough, but heart-broken, crushed. I happened to be in his house in Philadelphia when the telegram came from your uncle that you were lost and probably dead. I had just asked him for your hand," he added, smiling grimly at the recollection.

"You had no right to do that."

"I know that."

"It was not, it is not, his to give."

"Still when I won you I thought it would be pleasant all around if he knew and approved."

"And did he?"

"Not then, he literally drove me out of the house, but afterwards he said if I could find you I could have you; and, by Heaven, I have found you and I will have you whether you like it or not."

OWES HER LIFE TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Cured Both Stomach Trouble and Headaches

PALMERSTON, ONT., JUNE 20th. 1913.

"I really believe that I owe my life to "Fruit-a-tives". Ever since childhood, I have been under the care of physicians and have been paying doctor's bills. I was so sick and worn out that people on the street often asked me if I thought I could get along without help. The same old Stomach Trouble and distressing Headaches nearly drove me wild. Sometime ago, I got a box of "Fruit-a-tives" and the first box did me good. My husband was delighted and advised a continuation of their use.

Today, I am feeling fine, and a physician meeting me on the street, noticed my improved appearance and asked the reason. I replied, "I am taking Fruit-a-tives". He said, "Well, if Fruit-a-tives are making you look so well, go ahead and take them. They are doing more for you than I can".

Mrs. H. S. WILLIAMS.

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box. 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

"Never," cried the woman decisively.

The situation had got on Armstrong's nerves, and he must perforce show himself in his true colors. His only resources were his strength, not of mind but of body. He made another most damaging mistake at this juncture.

"We are alone here, and I am master, remember," he said meaningly. "Come, let's make up. Give me a kiss for my pains and—"

"I have been alone here for a month with another man," answered Enid Maitland who was strangely unafraid in spite of this threat. "A gentleman, he has never so much as offered to touch my hand without my permission; the contrast is quite to your disadvantage."

"Are you jealous of Louise Rosser?" asked Armstrong suddenly seeing that he was losing ground and casting about desperately to account for it, and to recover what was escaping him. "Why, that was nothing, a mere boy and girl affair," he ran on with a specious good humor as if it were all a trifle. "The woman was, I hate to say it, just crazy in love with me, but I really never cared anything especially for her; it was just a harmless sort of flirtation anyway. She afterward married this man Newbold and that's all there was about it."

The truth would not serve him and in his desperation and desire he staked everything on this astounding lie. The woman he loved looked at him with her face as rigid as a mask.

"You won't hold that against me, will you?" pleaded the man. "I told you that I'd been a man among men, yes, among women, too, here in this rough country, and that I wasn't worthy of you; there are lots of things in my past that I ought to be ashamed of and I am, and the more I see you the more ashamed I grow, but as for loving any one else, all that I've ever thought or felt or experienced before now is just nothing."

And this indeed was true, and even Enid Maitland with all her prejudice could realize and understand it. Out of the same mouth, was said of old, proceeded blessing and cursing, and from these same lips came truth and falsehood; but the power of the truth to influence this woman was as nothing to the power of falsehood. She could never have loved him, she new knew; a better man had won her affections, a nobler being claimed her heart; but if he had told the truth regarding his relationship to Newbold's wife and then had completed it with his passionate avowal of his present love for her, she would have at least admired him and respected him.

"You have not told me the truth," she answered directly; "you have deliberately been false."

"Can't you see," protested the man drawing nearer to her, "how much I love you?"

"Oh, that; yes I suppose that is true; as far as you can love any one I will admit that you do love me."

"So far as I can love any one?" he repeated after her. "Give me a chance and I'll show you."

"But you haven't told the truth about Mrs. Newbold. You have calumniated the dead, you have sought to shelter yourself by throwing the burden of a guilty passion upon the weaker vessel; it isn't manlike, it isn't—"

Armstrong was a bold fighter, quick and prompt in his decisions. He made another effort to set himself right. He staked his all on another throw of the dice, which he began to feel were somehow loaded against him.

"You are right," he admitted, wondering anxiously how much the woman really knew. "It wasn't true, it was a coward's act, I am ashamed of it. I'm so mad with love for you that I scarcely know what I am doing, but I will make a clean breast of it now. I loved Louise Rosser after a fashion before ever Newbold came on the scene. We were pledged to each other; a foolish quarrel arose, she was jealous of other girls—

"And had she no right to be?"

"Oh, I suppose so. We broke it off anyway and then she married Newbold, out of pique I suppose, or what you will. I thought I was heart-broken at the time, it did hit me pretty hard; it was five or six years ago; I was a youngster then, I am a man now. The woman has been dead long since; there was some cock-and-bull story about her falling off a cliff and her husband being compelled to shoot her. I didn't believe it at the time, and naturally I have been waiting to get even with him. I have been hating him for five years, but he has been good to you and we will let bygones be bygones. What do I care for Louise Rosser, or for him, or for what he did to her, now! I am sorry

The Secretary of The Hands Across the Seas Movement sends the following cable: "Advise those concerned through the press that arrangements are being made to place members of the party as guests in private homes. There is absolutely nothing to cause relatives anxiety. Party in best of spirits. All the nurses of the party and some of the teachers have volunteered for Red Cross service."

It is now up to the gardeners to do their part. The Horticultural Society have provided the opportunity—the Flower Show happens next week. Are you ready? Ladies, where are your beautiful house plants? Won't you let us have a look at them at the Flower Show? The Horticultural Society will send a dray to collect them and will also return them. Don't forget this. Ask Mr. Allan for a prize list, fill in the entry form, say you want the dray to come and get your exhibit—the Society will do the rest.

Gaetz-Cornett Co. have just received the greatest book by the greatest author of the present day, Harold Bell Wright's new novel, a real love story, "The Eyes of the World," which is a delightfully ripping romance with more than 400 pages of wholesome action, plot, counter-plot, mystery and love, sweet sentiment and strong passions. It holds the reader strenuous with interest from start to finish—it is wholesome. Its underlying purpose is a powerful blow at existing evils in art and literature. Its style, coloring, conception and fancies are its real charm and admirably fit the theme of the book, making it more romantic than anything the author has done. Price, $1.35. Sales nearing one million copies. Order a copy today.

First Regular A.C.R. Train Left City on Monday

The first regular A.C.R. train for Rocky Mountain House left on Monday last at 12.30 (noon). There had been no official notice of the train leaving, consequently many people who would have taken in the trip did not know until too late. The train was made up of engine No. 207, two coaches, caboose, baggage box car, weigh freight car, and a car of freight for Rocky Mountain House. The officials in charge of the train were engineer Dunbar, firemen Trout, conductor Carroll and brakesmen Hamley and Smith. The passengers included Messrs. Ironsides and Flint, of the C.P.R., Edmonton, H. C. Donlevy, agent, W. S. Hall, trainmaster, P. Gordon roadmaster, J. T. Moore, J. Grant McGregor, R. B. Welliver, A. F. Botsford, W. E. Payne, F. W. Galbraith, and others.

Eckville

On Saturday, August 1st, Eckville ball team played Leslieville on the latter's ground, and were defeated by a score of 7 to 5. Although the Eckville team can take a beating when they run up against a better team, they like to get every chance to win, and it was thought by many that the umpire was a little unfair in his decisions. In any case an umpire should have a thorough knowledge of the game and give his decisions definitely.

If not too late in the season, the Eckville manager may accept the offer to play "anywhere in Alberta" made by Leslieville. We would always like to see a friendly game.

Mr. Atkinson, of Edmonton, has been visiting here with Art. Eckford.

Birth—To Mr. and Mrs. Litt, a daughter, born on Saturday, August 8th. Our congratulations.

On Friday last Messrs. Paris & Watts, the colored entertainers from Calgary, visited town, and gave a most enjoyable concert in the town hall. Owing to the busy season of the year, and the fact that very short notice could be given, there were not as many out as expected, but those who were enjoyed themselves to the limit. You just can't keep your feet still when a colored gent makes the music, and at the dance which followed the concert old and young could not resist. We hope to make arrangements with Messrs. Paris & Watts to have them visit us again in the near future (when the railroads get going) and then "everybody dance."

Nordegg Notes

Messrs. Roberts and Schafer are practically through with their contract. Great credit is due Mr. McLean. Would have been finished earlier only for delay in machinery being held up on the road.

Messrs. Baird & McKenzie are finishing the last of the second fifty cottages, making in all over one hundred and twenty buildings. We hope they get the next contract, as it will insure the buildings being done on time. Mac is certainly a hustler.

Mr. Colvin, foreman for the plumbing department of Day Hardware Co., Red Deer, has been appointed plumbing inspector at Nordegg.

Mr. Coyle, respresenting Fulton Co., of Red Deer, spent a week in town measuring the boys for new suits. Everybody will be "dolled" up for the first.

Mr. Shanks is cutting another fire guard one hundred and fifty feet wide all around the town. We have had two or three scares, and he is bound to take no more chances.

A. J. Gaul, townsite engineer, has returned from Toronto with his family. Mr. Gaul came on, but left the family at Rocky Mountain House for a few days, as his new house is not quite completed.

Geo. Browster, the veteran mountaineer, took quite a large party for a ten days' trip into the Mountains. This is a grand trip, and should be advertised, as we are sure it would become very popular.

Jake Payne has opened a dance hall and ice cream parlor in town.

Mr. Fletcher, fire ranger, forded the Saskatchewan river on Wednesday and got a good bath.

Mr. Foote, coal analyst of the C.P.R., and chief fuel agent, spent three days looking over the mines and hopes soon to see the C.P.R. running into town.
